Dear Editor: History has shown us that effective civic, business, and governmental leaders can move mountains for the common good. It has also shown us the adverse effects poor leaders can have on our lives. What insurance do we have that our leaders are prepared to make the right choices for us? Do we place enough importance on the training they will receive before they assume such important roles?

One organization, the Girl Scouts, recognizes the need to prepare youth for the challenges ahead. The values, self-confidence, and leadership skills gained through Girl Scouting will help girls make sound decisions on issues that affect us all.

What kind of people are responsible for this vital process? Adults who are committed to youth and who know the importance of guidance through the early years. These adults are remarkable women who juggle full business, social, religious, and family lives and still find time to form partnerships with girls. That's right — Girl Scout
